

FINANCIAL SERVICES INDUSTRY PROFESSIONALS WELCOME INCOMING ALBANESE GOVERNMENT

FINSIA – the professional membership body for the financial services industry – has today welcomed the new Anthony Albanese-led Government into office, and at the same time, thanked the previous Morrison Government for the work done in leading Australia through a difficult and uncertain period across significant economic and public health challenges.

“FINSIA is looking forward to being able to work collaboratively with the new Government on a broad range of financial services policy reforms that can help to further unlock Australia’s potential to be a strong and innovative economy, one that is able to harness the opportunities of our presence in the fastest growing region of the world economy,” said Chief Executive Officer & Managing Director, Yasser El-Ansary.

“The financial services industry is the biggest sector of the Australian economy, contributing more than A$185B to national output each year. The strength of our financial services industry has helped to shield Australia from some of the most challenging economic and market downturns over the past few years, and there is an opportunity to continue to strengthen the sector for the future.

“The intersection of innovation and financial services is something that presents Australia with an unparalleled opportunity over the years ahead. FINSIA is looking forward to participating actively in the sharing and contest of ideas about how we can work together to unlock and realise our full potential and, in doing so, create a stronger Australian economy for the future,” said Mr El-Ansary.
